Reds Claim Discovery Of Most Ancient Rugs In Frozen-up Tomb

MOSCOW, U S S R —According to newspaper reports here, Soviet archeologists have found the oldest rugs in the world.

The press reports said the rugs were discovered in the rich tomb of tribal chieftains in the distant Altai. The treasure, it was added, are 2,500 years old.

Further, it was said, one of the two carpets is as fine an example of rug making as the best Persian rugs up to now.

The reports said the rugs, the bodies of the princes and princesses buried in the tomb, and many other interesting objects were in an excellent state of preservation since the tomb was permanently frozen. One of the rugs, the articles said, was of felt and quite large, about 12 by 20 feet.

It depicts a divine being sitting on a throne with a tree in his hands. The second rug is velvet and of extraordinary high quality. Both have many colors. Soviet scientists said they were made in the fifth century before Christ.

Two bodies, one of a man, the other of a woman, found in the tomb are embalmed. On the head of the woman was a tiara-like headgear.

The tomb itself was luxuriously appointed. The walls were covered with felt cloth on which were pictures of griffins (mythical monsters, half lion and half eagle). In another section was a chariot, a decorated saddle, bridles and saddle cloth. They were made of felt and covered with ornamented cloths with embroidered flowers and birds of paradise.

Earth's Atmosphere Rocks With Wave-Like Disturbance

NEW YORK. — The British naval physical laboratory Slough, England, has reported that the top of the earth's atmosphere rocks to and fro with a wave-like motion.

The motion is like that of water in the top of a bucket after it has been tilted. There are both waves and ripples. The discovery, it was said, shows that the wave motion can be predicted, and this forecasting promises a new step in radio.

It might be used to beam radio long distances, far around the curvature of the earth, and far beyond the limits of radar. Such a beam might aid in steering a guided missile to a trans ocean target.

Study of Weather Effect On Stone May Take Century

WASHINGTON.—Federal government workers have gone to work on an experiment which may go on for as long as 100 years. They want to find out how various stones will weather the capital's climate.

To determine that, they have assembled 2,000 rocks from 47 states and 16 foreign countries and built them into a masonry wall 13 feet high, 33 feet long, and 2 feet thick.

The big rock heap is in a field at the national bureau of standards which tests all sorts of things for the government.

German Paddles Small Kayak 30,000 Miles to Australia

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA.—For seven years and four months Oscar Speck, a local opal cutter, paddled an Eskimo kayak 30,000 miles up rivers and across oceans from Germany to Australia.

But war had come while he made his way down the Coral Sea and Speck was a German. So, with the end of his odyssey almost in sight, he was arrested and spent most of the next seven years in confinement.

Speck's amazing quest began at Ulm, on the Danube, in May, 1932. He was 25, cancing was his pastime, and Germany was in the depths of a depression. It seemed to him a good time to get out of Germany for awhile.

He loaded his collapsible 18-foot kayak with a prismatic compass, charts, water containers, lots of condensed milk, chocolate and cheese. There was no room for a sextant, and anyway, squinting to near the water his horizon was only two and a half miles.

With two strong arms and two square yards of sail, he took off down the Danube, to Bulgaria, to Turkey, to Cyprus. He had meant to stop there. But he went on—to Syria; down the Euphrates to Iraq, and then along the Arabian coastline to India, thence to Ceylon.

Still he went on. He had a new goal now: Australia.

The years passed. Kayak after kayak wore out and replacements ordered three months ahead, arrived from Europe. Speck used up five. He went to Burma, Singapore, Sumatra, Batavia, Sourabaya, Bali and the islands ahead. He capsized 10 times, was blown off his course, taken prisoner by tribesmen.

Hitler was almost unknown when Speck left Germany. But Hitler's war stopped him when he was 18 miles from Thursday island, and he finished his journey in a police launch.

Today, Speck, now an Australian, is comfortably settled in Sydney and has his own opal cutting business. One day, he hopes to revisit Germany to see his 80-year-old mother. But he will come back to Australia.

"I got here the hard way," he says, "I intend to stay."

Motorist Grabs off Mattress Before Van Man Can Recover

ATLANTA, GA.—A moving van transporting the furniture of W. H. Taylor dropped a mattress on a residential street.

The truck driver turned around immediately, but before he could retrieve the article, another vehicle stopped at the scene.

A man jumped out, stuffed the mattress into his car and sped away.

The truck driver was too startled to take his license number.
